coldness of an early winter?

Who mentioned winter?
Is it cold outside? God . . . it got down to 32 degrees last night and I had my window open, but if you turn on that damn heat . . . you either suffocate or get nauseated with the smell.

Smell?

the flowers . . .

they smell of a late summer that melted quickly into fall which really turned out to be winter . . . so there was

. . . no autumn.

Autumn,

I like autumn, even though we didn't have one. The colors are my personality conglomerate. They make up what appears in this lude form that really isn't me.

I mean, the lude form isn't me.

The colors are me, but not all the time.

I'm not insane

the colors conglomerate are insanity whirling around going

nowhere just down, to be raked up by some caretaker who really doesn't give a care about anything except his paycheck.

Calm, calm. The air is calm and there is a freshness about the campus and no one is worried about grades, or finals, or anything, and the trees, have greengreen leaves, and it's the FIRST week of school and everyone is ready to study,

once they've greeted everyone else.
And the upperclassmen have nothing to do.
But there's rush, standing in line for hours(?) and orientation
What was that meeting? and Excuse me . . .
I'm a freshman, and could you tell me . . .
WHERE IS THE FOB building????
But still there's a calm, and even though you don't sleep . . .

talking until 3 a.m. trying to decide upon the most important issues in your life like "Did George's pizza improve over the summer," and is the grass better here or at home . . .
There's something about the campus that makes you feel s e c u r e.

A leaf
floats down
from a gold and orange tree, and if you watch very closely you can almost see your breath, and it's fall and you are safe, secure, back at DePauw.

But the year begins, yes it does,
drop a class, add a class, What WAS that prof's name?? and nothing's clear, and the pizza's give up their prominent place in your schedule and typewriters take over.

The calm becomes isolation
I S O L A T I O N
days, mixers, house dances . . . classes.
What? Never been to one two three exams . . .

Oh, My God, not yet, I haven't cracked a book, book, book,
go into finals cold, sure it get's cold
in Indiana where you can vote, just don't get caught, you might get arrested.
But still the cold is comforting, you hope it will freeze the rain so the ground will be covered with snow instead of mud and squishey wet brown leaves.
But sometimes it seems that all you could ever want

is right here at DePauw,
a cup of hot cocoa in the Hub with a bridge game or just a little time to be alone to study. Perhaps it is perhaps.
But there are four years to relax here . . .
doing whatever you can find to do.

Did you ever f e e l
that four years of education might just slurp
right down the drain. I mean, you might not find a job,
or get drafted, or something . . .
And there's always senior clutch,
watch it strike

your friends
and watch them

the same security the campus brings.

Days, daze, fly by. Relax, head out to the DELLS,
Take a guitar?
no thanks I have one
Have one?
don't mind if I do . . .

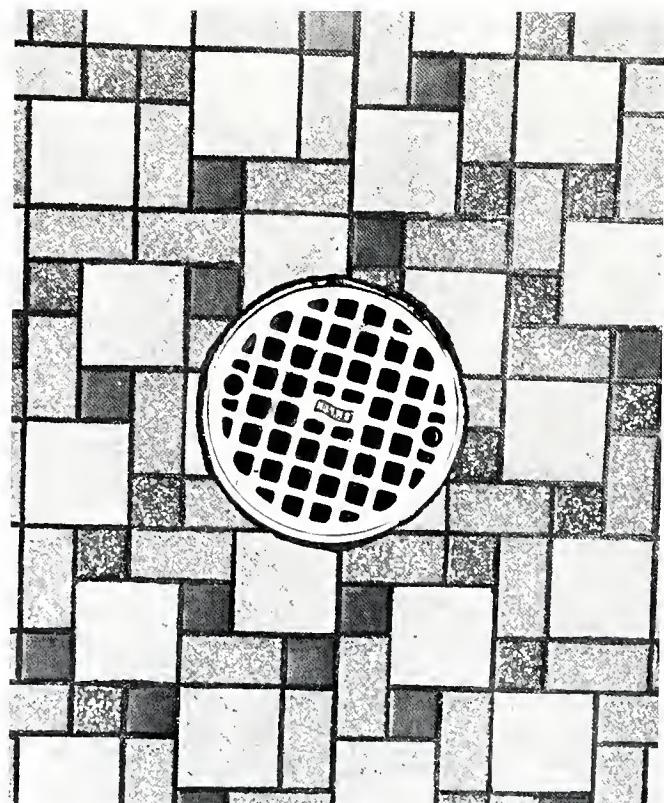

Circles, circle, just like changing a

Red tape becomes wound around you and you and you until you can't breathe
so get out, with a hash pipe and anything else you might need . . . blackstock, anyplace to Get

away . . .
away from red tape, bookin',
and the everpresent
isolating, chilling rain.

Blackstock, little 5, race race, hurry
hurry to the finish Finish of what??? Four years years, be the first to graduate with the NEW requirements . . .
DePauw gone liberal? Sure new requirements, except for music majors,
does anyone remember the other issues?
Well, possibly you had an hourly,
or a house dance, and there wasn't time to worry about young faculty, dinosaurs,
and the war.

But the rain continues, cars stalled in the streets,

someone said they saw an ark, but that you know would really mess up an Old Testament exam, so pretend you didn't see.

Umbrella? What's that?

Blue jeans and a T-shirt never were hurt by a little rain? Game of frisbee?
In the rain? Sure, my 2 o'clock is BORING anyway, and the roof leaks
the drops
distract me.

Got a match?

A what?
A match.

Oh, a match.
Sure, let me light it,
and can I bum one, you see I'm broke
I just made a room and board payment,
and I'm working my way through school.
Working you?

Sure it's easy to earn 5000 dollars.
What are you doing?

can't say, it's not LEGAL
"No student shall be turned away from DePauw for lack of funds."
Oh, yeah, then what about x and y
and zzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzz sleep, sleep, Wake up, you're missing your nine . . . my nine? I dropped it last week, where do you think I got all of this red tape from

Red tape . . .

 sounds like the commies to me.

I've heard there are commies out in

 THE WORLD.

What's the world like?

I don't know,

 they don't have a class on it and anyway . . .

I'm pre-med, and I really wouldn't have time to take it . . .

No one to teach it . . .

 faculty cutback . . .

no one left. A young professor? Let's see now, I used to know what that was . . .
Levine? Wasn't he THE one?

Yeah, I wanted to help, but you see I was busy and my parents are alums, and I hate to get involved in anything

POLITICAL.

Dogs, sunny days, alligators at FIJI isle . . .
goldfish, and TIGERS.

 Animals all over . . .

dinosaurs . . . sure all kinds of old things
at DePauw like fire escapes, tenure, rules

No drinking at DePauw, except of course if you are 21 and sneak down to the bar, Toppers, 7-13. Sure, bring home a tapper, sneak it into the room, and be quiet . . .

Too bad the rules aren't obeyed anymore . . .
we could use some peace and quiet . . .
but how can you hear the quiet??

Especially with the E.C. bell ringing at ALL hours of the night and the Sig Chi's running around the boulder.

Not to mention all the people trying to get their pictures in Playboy.

But relax, go to the Duck and sit and rap,
drink cider and let the music envelop you go to the art center and work, or hang around out on the lawns, if you don't mind
the mud,

 take a walk, and let the mid-west air make you forget about everything except yourself and nature.

Walk and forget, and forget and enjoy.

old gold

Balloons (gold of course) dot the campus and it's Old Gold Day again, when alums and even some current students gather at Blackstock to watch a football game and you can hear "That's my boy out there," whispered through the stands as even PARENTS come to visit on another DePauw "big weekend."

And then there's the Old Gold queen, the cheerleaders and the band . . . they're all here to watch the action and to get in on the old "Black and Gold" spirit.

The black and gold banners flapping rather wetly in the breeze, look almost like mourning banners: could be, it rained too.

bust creates campus cleavage

The Lambda Chi Alpha sponsored a return billing for Miss Watermelon Bust the Alpha Chis took the honors again . . . so what else is there to do on a Saturday afternoon besides look at chests in the UB ballroom . . . not a whole lot. Everybody spit seeds and filled up on juicy overripe watermelon. Oh . . . but the most exciting part was when the Lambda Chis painted all the sidewalks with "Long live the queen" and assorted other obscenities about midnight the night before the chest queen was crowned.

What would Amy Vanderbilt think?

Dianne Larson, Ms. Watermelon Bust 1972 comments, "I'll keep abreast of things."

A mighty heave by a muscular jock!

The flight of the melon.

Finally, a graceful reentry into loving arms.

Eventually most people finally got to the melon of the Bust.

PLEASE LET OUR GRASS

The lights go up (down(off) in Bowman Gymnasium and you know this concert is going to be as bad as the last big concert DePauw had, and CHASE takes the stage, and you pretend you didn't waste the money. The acoustics hurt your ears, as if the music didn't, and you wait until it's over to leave because you spent money to listen to it.

You have to hand it to the Union Board . . . they're consistent: Bad concert after bad concert and spring or fall, you know it's the same.

hail to thee o rotc

If this academic year will be known for having done anything useful at all it will undoubtedly be the removal of the right-wing's last line of defense: Air Force ROTC.

A few years back—when killing was the vogue—ROTC had its heyday on college campuses across the country. From Yale to Berkley the chant went:

I wanna be an airborne ranger,
I wanna live a life of danger,
I wanna go to Viet Nam,
I wanna kill some Charley Cong.

But, alas, in an age of elevated consciousness, decreased military expenditures and 50,000 young Americans dead, AFROTC rolls up its blood stained carpet and zooms into the horizon.

But there exists an anachronism. One can't help but wonder why the AFROTC detachment stayed on campus for so long even after its enrollment had dropped well below standard levels (This year's Corps of Cadets has about ten students) and other units all over the country were being phased out.

The answer lies deep within the realm of the military's mighty intellect; men with great stature, knowledge, and a tremendous respect for the value of human life, no matter what color, creed or nationality. Yes, these are men who stand second only to Mr. Green Jeans himself when it comes to a philosophical awareness of the cosmic reality of human nature. Such giants have been known to say such things as, "I don't think, therefore I must not be. But I am. If I wasn't, how couldn't I be what I am not?"

Two years ago, in the early dawn of May, the AFROTC building was, without just provocation and with deliberate forethought, ruthlessly attacked and burned. To leave the DePauw campus after such an insult to an institution which represents the very principles upon which this nation was founded would have been "giving in" to the underhanded anarchists who committed this atrocity. What is more, if AFROTC would have left DePauw that year, as it might have done anyway, the Air Force would have lost a tremendous amount of respect in the eyes of the God-fearing, good American students all across the nation.

So, in an effort to uphold its dignity, honor, and the American Way, AFROTC stayed on the DePauw campus despite below normal enrollment, vicious sentiments, and "Communist-inspired" attacks. They stayed to prove a point. To prove that no one, especially dope-smoking, peace-loving, anarchist hippies could undermine the might of the United States Air Force.

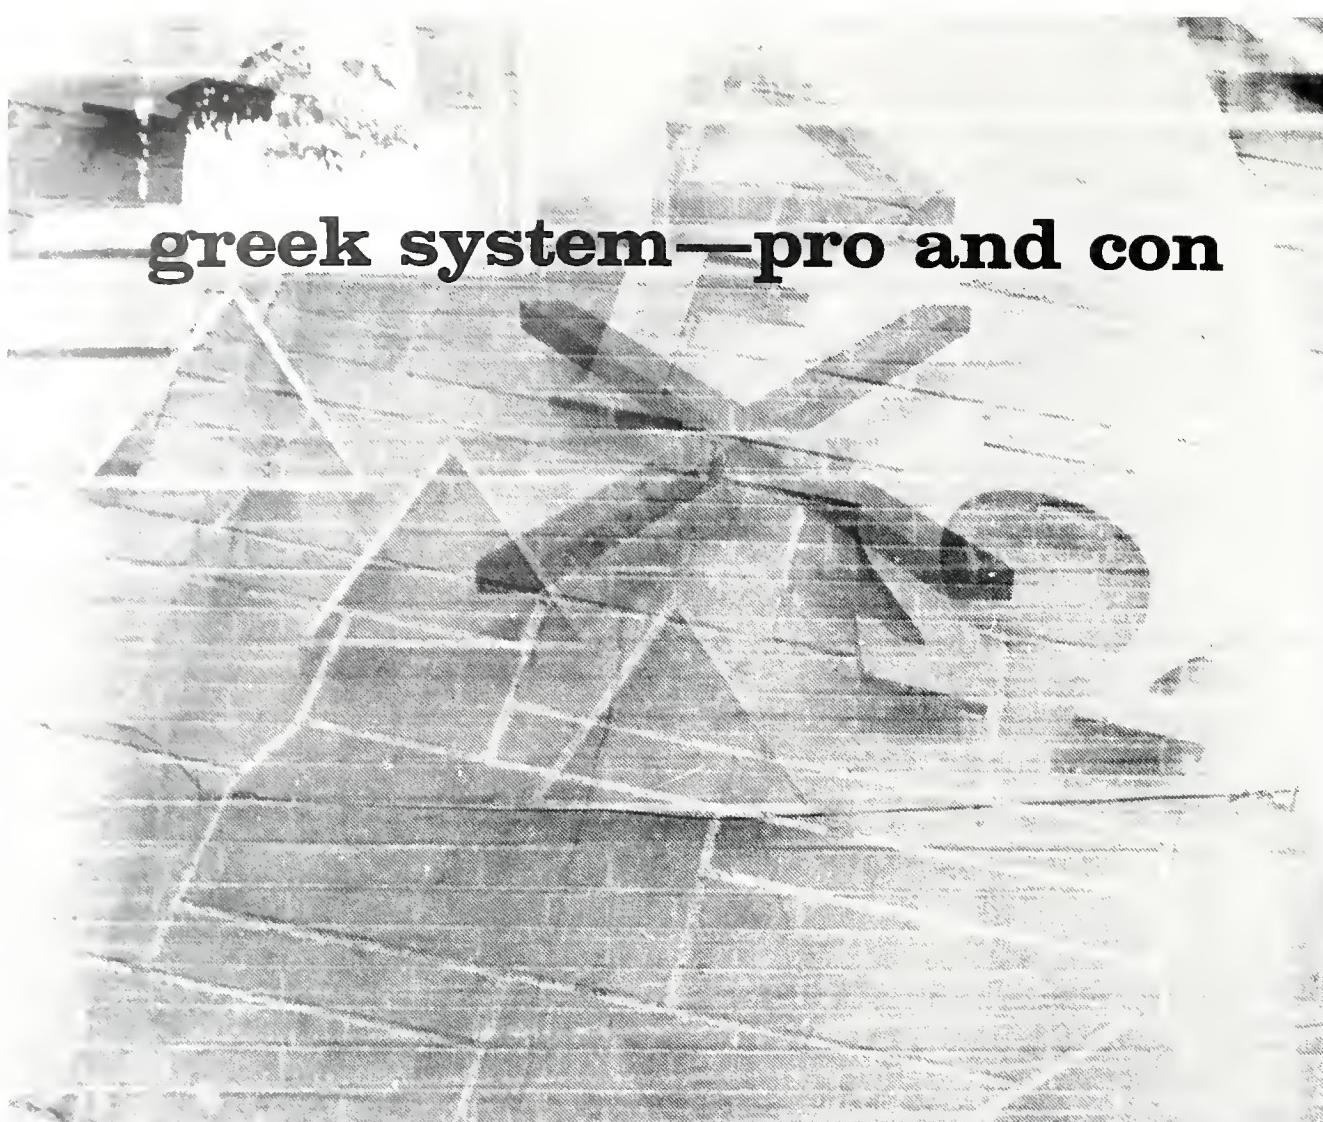

Like Nixon's idea of "Peace with Honor," AFROTC decided to preserve its image and wait two years before it ran away like a squealing puppy with its tail between its legs. Hail to thee oh ROTC, defender of right.

AEROSPACE
CENTER

greek system—pro and con

"Nobody dates independents."

"Once in a house, you'll always have friends."

"After all, your mother was a Theta."

Only a bewildered, frightened freshman would pledge for reasons like those.

Living in a Greek unit will not magically transform a wallflower into a rose. What is more, if there is such a distinct line between the two races—Greek and independent—why would a dormie want to date a Greek?

A little gold pin is no guarantee of friendship. Any human sincerely interested in other people is going to make good friends, no matter where he lives.

Of all the reasons to go

Greek, parental pressure is undoubtedly the worst. Mommy and Daddy may have needed to feel an identification with a particular group. Junior may not fit into Dad's old house. Or (horror) he may even be a loner.

But there is a reason to become Greek. Sororities and fraternities are nothing but communes, with all the advantages and drawbacks inherent in such living systems. Greek was founded on the principle that by working together people could create a better lifestyle than their university offered. Particularly at DePauw, Greek does offer distinct advantages over dorm life.

When it comes down to black and white figures, Greek living costs more than dorm life. However the discrepancy in the two fees is like the difference between buying a shirt at the dime store and putting out the extra ten for the one which lasts longer and looks better. In most houses, the food is far more palatable and nutritious than dorm food. Sorority girls have their own housekeys. They never have to worry about signing one out. Fraternity men are free to redecorate their rooms into a flat straight from Playboy if they have the desire and the money. A large number of Greek men own refrigerators. In houses with open kitchens, students save money on "munchie food." With their chandeliers, balconies, spacious porches, and fire-

why be greek? by beth sanders places, houses are more luxurious in their public areas than the dorms. Many Greeks say their living units simply "feel homier" than a dorm.

The University has less direct influence over a Greek living unit. If house members do not like the food, they can see that either the cook or the housemother is not rehired. If Greeks hate the way the living room is decorated, they can start action to get the decor changed. Maids and janitors are not on University payrolls; they are responsible to living unit members. Because they can control their environment, Greeks can honestly feel that the house is their own.

Greeks definitely have more organized social scene. How many fraternities invite Hodge over for an exchange? Although some people say keggers are "pseudo" or "fakey" other students really enjoy them. For people who have few opportunities to meet new people, these little social events are a valid way to get beyond their own circle of friends. In addition, the house-dances and other parties Greek living units hold are one method of solving the eternal question of what-to-do-on-weekends.

Like any commune, houses demand that each member be responsible for his share of the work-call duty, phone duty, locking the doors at night. Sometimes the chore is more enjoyable—playing volleyball, decorating Old Gold floats, remembering the star of every 1940 film during the Trivia Bowl. However, many Greeks feel that their increased responsibility toward others draws the house together. Through sharing both the bathroom sink and tales of heartbreak, a sense of unity and caring develops which many students would not dream of trading for their "independence."

In many ways, then, Greek offers more independence than dorm life. Fraternities are free from small, but irritating, University restrictions like the ban on refrigerators and re-decorating. Greeks have direct control over their environment. But people do not stay in houses because of food or luxury. They remain Greek because they genuinely like the people they are living with and care enough about them to put up with the extra responsibility communal living entails. Strangely enough, all the call duty, IM games, and serenades do create a spirit of brotherhood and sisterhood which cannot be denied.

Independence is not an institution to be compared with the structure of fraternal institutions. Its salient Quality is a lack of characteristics, a lack of structure. Inherent in an absence of structure is an abundance of freedom. The imposition of rules, social structure, and norms of behavior are conducive only to the freedom of the weak and unimaginative. Organization fills the void the masses perceive in freedom.

The preponderance of Greek living units at DePauw would seem to be a function of the character of DePauw students. Most students at this university did not matriculate in search of freedom or the objective inquiry and evaluation of the human condition that an open, unstructured society inspires. Rather, they came seeking an uninterrupted progression of bourgeois experiences and to preserve in isolation the values of a competitive, materially oriented society best exemplified by suburbia. Whereas this may be a legitimate means to a placid existence, it has no positive effect on education or on the quality of life at DePauw. Fraternities and sororities are the best manifestation of DePauw's mundane obsessions and the mediocre objectives of its students.

If the Greek system indicates the character of students, it says much more of DePauw's administration. DePauw's enthusiastic support of fraternities betrays a good deal of philosophical pessimism and even some latent misanthropic tendencies. It seems DePauw has very little reverence for freedom or at least can not trust its students to handle it wisely.

Like Freshman Women's hours, and the alcohol rule, the Greek system is a means to control students and keep them virtuous by removing the opportunity of choice. But where is virtue without choice and the exercise of volition? Conduct becoming a DePauw student is achieved by regulation and penalty, not by persuasion or reasoning. Desirable behavior is accomplished the same way in Greek Houses. People are coerced into caring for the House and each other. Pledges are trained, not taught. And membership selection stems from the belief that a rewarding or pleasant group living situation requires homogeneous residents.

not an institution

Deliberately fostered misconceptions and ignorance of Dormitory living account for the majority of pro-Greek arguments. Food and facilities are roughly commensurate to those in Houses. Opportunities to break University rules are equally abundant. Far better, Independent students are less inclined toward self-regulation, with the result that toleration of differing life-styles is greater in Residence Halls. Lacking established behavior norms, competitive social objectives, and the group identity psychology, dormitory social life is refreshingly more spontaneous and progressive.

Whatever Independent's lack in material luxury, can be more than offset by intangibles. Many find the more diverse dormitory population offers superior opportunities for out-of-class learning and challenging human relationships. Ninety percent of DePauw's foreign and black students choose Residence Halls. And for those students to whom consistency of moral convictions and personal life style is important Independence offers a chance to attend DePauw without hypocrisy or shame.

But the Greek-Independent controversy is not a contest between moralists and utilitarians. There is no contest in either system of priority. The past two decades in this country's history have proven that compassion and toleration have more social value than elitism and discrimination. Their moral value is self-evident to any practicing Christian or lover of personal freedom. The effort to live compatibly with people of all kinds and persuasions is no longer an ideal. It is a necessity.

And here is the tragedy—that DePauw's administration and the majority of its students should so eagerly embrace a social system that is antithetical to those principles and attitudes so needed to maintain a stable, creatively productive society. The Greek system is the child of an extreme personal inwardness of the most banal nature that characterizes life at DePauw. There is no grandeur, no commitment to a cause of societal importance, no sense of higher aspiring. DePauw casts a menacing shadow on the Reickean optimism of a liberated generation it has never seen or acknowledged. For this the Greek system is at least partially responsible. Independent students will not share in that responsibility.

Winter Term. Born January 3, 1973; died January 23, 1973. In the short span of twenty days DePauw students experienced a wide variety of things. Everything from veterinary work to baseball films was there for the asking. Subjects ranging from the Civil War to the "student revolt" of the late sixties were studied.

Winter Term was established as a month of independent learning and productivity. Many abuse this independence. Others use it. It's up to you. That's the beauty of the whole thing. It's also the horror.

fear and loathing
on hanna street

As you enter the lobby of picturesque Bowman Gymnasium you are greeted warmly by the smell of the chicken feathers that can be seen around the complacent tiger that hangs above your head. "Hi, Star," greets Coach as he walks by you with his jockstrap visible above his shorts. To your left, behind glass doors with curtains over them, is the room where you can square dance if you want to. And if you don't want to you can play ping pong or ask Miss Federman to be excused. To your right, karate class goes on. People twist and turn, stumble and fall to the rhythm of a Korean's grunts underneath the auspices of the great, Father Bowman. If you're smart you ignore the 20¢ coke machine and go to the drinking fountain to quench your thirst. You can stand the sight of a little phlegm while you drink can't you? Watch out for the wet paint and the loose wires along your path.

Once inside the gymnasium proper, the amazing variety of colors and sights overwhelms you. Above your head bird cages hang over the gym's 100 watt light bulbs to protect them from flying debree such as basketballs, shuttlecocks, arms, and legs. In one of them a tennis ball has pierced the armor and is now lodged there permanently; or at least until the bulb burns out. Look out for Coach Harvey as he passes you on his sixth lap around the floor. Speaking of the floor, here is where Bowman's wide variety of colors can be experienced the most. The dead, finished and refinished floor is crisscrossed with a delicately designed labyrinth of red, green, yellow, and black lines. If you're lucky enough to see a basketball game in progress you will be amazed at how those ten, LITTLE men can cross and recross these lines without Moving along you progress upstairs to the gym's balcony and office space. Be sure to have an answer ready for the Coach when he asks you if you want to attend his wrestling camp this summer. And after you've answered him once be sure to praise his wrestling efforts and answer him when he asks you about his wrestling camp again. He forgets sometimes.

Leaving the Coach, you go out onto the balcony and walk to your right past two rows of dented and bent chairs, and twenty-four gentlemen in sweatsuits, headbands, and sneakers. All of them are carrying handball gloves and some of them even have handballs. "Does this place have a handball court?" you ask. A bushy headed gentlemen answers you as he adjusts his glasses strap, "No." But there is a room with four walls, a ceiling, and a dangerous, dust covered floor that DePauw calls a handball court. The white paint on the walls is marred where gymnasium-issued handball have hit and, in many cases, met their death; splitting into hemispheres right where their seamless construction was to prevent it. In the rear left-hand corner of this room a corner projects, creating an interesting handball hazard that is unique and can be found only at DePauw.

It is here that many points have been scored and injuries have been sustained. This corner sticks out as if to say, "All right, guys, play around me. The strong shall score here or die trying. The timid shall fall by the wayside. Come unto me fear of crossing the wrong ones. It takes months of practice to learn how to do this. Also, the game's officials don't have the damnedest idea of which line is which. It doesn't matter to the officials anyway because they are just as drunk as everyone else in the gym.

in the great heritage of Father Bowman and play with and around me. For you sure as hell can't ignore me or remove me. DePauw athletics forever!" Let us leave this "handball court" with its corners and its nails and the never-ending line of men who must wait to play in it, and move on to the basement.

As you descend the stairs into the basement, a number of gentlemen pass you on their way to the gym floor. Each has on the same outfit consisting of a gray tank shirt and size 34 shorts. Most of them would take a size 30 pair of shorts, nevertheless they are wearing a size 34. No wonder Coach's jock strap was visible above his shorts. The gym outfits are made that way.

And speaking of Coach, if you look you can see him to your right in the coaches' locker room as he examines the blisters on his feet, dressed in something other than street clothes. "Hi, Sport!" "Hi, Coach." What else can you say?

The floor is gray and the walls are the same dingy yellow that can be found all over the building. Actually, it's old gold (Father Bowman's favorite color). It appropriately matches the odor of wet tank shirts combined with chlorox and dying sneakers. In the maze of bashed in lockers is a rust covered weight machine. This wonderous machine contains a complicated arrangement of weights and pulleys and strings none of which work. But there are always plenty of hearty and muscular souls willing to try.

If you remove your shoes and the rest of your clothes Coach will let you proceed to your right into the men's shower area. The showers themselves are not worth your attention but by going through them you can get to one of a number of tunnels and passageways that are characteristic of Bowman's basement. The reason for these is so that any male that happens to find himself in the women's area or vice versa will find himself hopelessly trapped and lost like a rat in a maze (so to speak).

Anyway, by going through this tunnel you can see the men's sauna on your right. Inside the sauna a gray tin box filled with rocks stands in the middle of a wooden slat floor. Directions on the wall read: PLEASE ONE CUP OF WATER EVERY TEN MINUTES! Well, it takes at least five cups of water dumped on the rocks to achieve any heat at all much less enough to initiate perspiration. At certain times of the day you can see a gentleman or two in this sauna dressed in a full set of sweats. It must get cold in there. At least it's not hot enough.

Passing beyond the sauna bath and through a foot bath in which the ice just melted you arrive at DePauw's natatorium. This is either an oversized bathtub or a glorified mud puddle. At any rate it strikes you as the remainder of the foot bath you just stepped in. The water is just as cold. Around this "pool" are benches that are provided for the use of spectators and naked freshmen awaiting their swimming test. The diving board is adequate but not very practical. It hurts when you hit the water. After five minutes in the water the non-existent chlorine drives you out with your sinuses crying for mercy. So you leave the Bowman swimming pool.

Where else is there to go? If possible you could explore the women's locker room but I wouldn't advise it. People lost in the maze have often never come back. My God! They're out to get you here. After visiting the pool paranoia grips your soul and chokes your stomach. You have to get out and you have to do so without passing that tiger and his chicken feathers. If you let him, Junior will show you the rear exit to the men's locker room. Through a door out by the tennis court and into a mud puddle that is real and not called a swimming pool, and you are out. Oh to be free from Father Bowman's grip. May you be successful in leaving him behind. Too many aren't.

Machine politics at DePauw

By JEFF McDONALD

Staff Writer

Ed's Note: The following is an interpretive report on faculty policies at DePauw, the result of three month's research. Because of the complicated nature of the material and the average reader's general lack of background knowledge, the story is written in chronological order.

A great conservative/liberal rift among the DePauw faculty began about six years ago, when a group of six DePauw professors got together and decided some changes were needed.

"We were sort of amorphous liberals," claimed Robert Newton, professor of religion and a member of the original group.

"Our basic concerns were in regards to admissions policies. We felt that too many of the students were coming from the same type of socio-economic background.

"Also, it was a time when civil rights was a major national issue. We felt that admissions po-

"In reaction to this, a group formed against our ideology. Since that time, every issue of the liberal persuasion that I can think of has been voted down at faculty meetings, until very recently. Our group of six disbanded in 1968 out of hopelessness and has not met since," Newton concluded.

DINOSAUR CLUB

The Dinosaur Club, to which Newton alluded, was the group that organized to combat the liberal movement. However, unlike the liberals, it is still in full activity today.

"It's not a hard and fast group," claimed Arthur Shumaker, professor of English, secretary parliamentarian of the faculty, and a member of the Dinosaur Club. "There are no set members; no officers per se."

When asked the purpose of Dinosaur Club, Shumaker responded, "To keep DePauw the same kind of institution it has always been lily was not focused enough upon the recruiting of racial and economic minorities.

"We were also concerned about a policy regarding high school class rank. For years, it was a policy that a student must graduate in the top half of his class to be allowed admission.

"We saw that this policy was not being followed — there were students from the bottom half being admitted, while upper-half minority students were being turned away.

"Also, we wanted to get the picture out of the application form. We felt that it was unnecessary and that it was perhaps, in fact, being used in a discriminative way.

"The group's purpose was to adopt an amendment to the By-Laws that would make these objectives possible. What we eventually ended up with was a standing committee of faculty members

By that I mean a private, liberal arts, co-educational university of high quality.

"Anything that would interfere with this quality as perceived by the club would be a question of interest.

"The Dinosaur Club was formed in opposition to a viewpoint that liberalization should occur in admissions policy, thus allowing mediocre students to come here, and, as we saw it, cause a decline in the quality of education.

"But we weren't denying anyone their point-of-view. As I have said before, I am totally committed to the ideal of free speech. I wouldn't be here if it weren't allowed. However, I do believe that a person ought to be responsible for what he says."

"Actually," Shumaker concluded, "I've always thought of myself as a liberal. Change should be the only thing permanent about a on admissions.

"However, the President of the University then went before the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees and had them officially declare the role of the Admissions Committee to be advisory only.

"About this same time, the race riots (Detroit and Newark) caused a great amount of fear among many members of the faculty and administration. They seemed to feel that allowing more minorities to attend DePauw might inevitably lead to some kind of trouble.

"Also, many social issues were foremost in the mind's of the students: open visitation, out-in-town housing, etc. A few liberal professors backed the students' viewpoints.

"It seems that from that time on, liberals have been seen at DePauw as being harmonious to student power.

university. There is a wide divergence of opinion within the Dinosaur Club."

When asked by this reporter whether the group served a political function, i.e. trying to persuade members of the faculty to vote with the sentiments of The Dinosaur Club, Shumaker would only repeat his commitment to free speech.

That is the essential background regarding the major liberal/conservative split within DePauw's faculty. According to Newton, President Kerstetter's action in getting the Executive Committee to declare the Admissions Committee "advisory only" caused the rift still present between most liberals and the administration today.

At this point, it is best to examine the Dinosaur Club and faculty politics as they are today. From this point in the article on, many of this reporter's sources must remain anonymous.

--Machine politics at DePauw

"Their reasons, as one of them put it, are that "speaking out against the Dinosaurs is equivalent to cutting one's own throat here at DePauw."

Several members of the faculty who attended meetings of The Dinosaur Club have confided their thoughts to this reporter. They reacted to Dr. Shumaker's statements in the following manner:

Mr. X—"Though there was some divergence of opinion, the general atmosphere was of an incredible sumness. It seemed to me more of a grill session to try to justify a certain group rationale."

Mr. Y—"The idea that there is a wide divergence of opinion within the Dinosaur Club is, in my opinion, totally absurd.

"The issue being discussed at the meeting I attended regarded student participation in certain faculty affairs. The overwhelming feeling at the meeting was — 'we're against it, how do we stop it?'

Mr. Z—"I went to the meetings for a few years. When I saw that the power structure at faculty meetings, Farber and Shumaker, were trying to push through these ideas unfairly, I felt like telling them all to go to hell. I quit going. It's disgusting that people who hold a certain viewpoint are trying to pressure others to agree or get out."

Mr. Z elaborated with an example: "In 1969, the faculty voted not to allow students to attend faculty meetings. When the issue came up again this year, Shumaker tried to tell us that discussion on the matter was closed, there being a rule against it already. Can you imagine what the country's constitution would be like if the first ten amendments hadn't been added?"

WHO'S WHO IN THE DINOSAUR CLUB

Who are the Dinosaurs? This has been, in some ways, the best and worst kept secret at DePauw; everyone seems to know, but few people are sure. This reporter has some names of faculty members who attended the meetings with some regularity that are significant: Arthur Shumaker, who, as mentioned before, is secretary/parliamentarian of the faculty; Dean Robert H. Farber, academic dean of the University; and at least five department heads.

The significance of these people being associated with the club is as follows:

1) Farber presides over faculty meetings in the absence of Kerstetter; he thus is the chair and has the right to recognize or not recognize speakers from the floor. As dean of the University, he is also the top man in regard to the hiring-firing of professors.

2) Shumaker advises the chair regarding procedure for the meetings; Mr. Z has already made an attack on his partiality in this role. Shumaker is also in charge of all faculty elections.

3) Department heads also make recommendations regarding the hiring-firing and raises of professors.

Sources indicate that the Dinosaur Club consists of anywhere from twenty to thirty-five members; this report, however, deals solely with the role of members of the University power structure.

FARBER'S ROLE

Dean Farber admitted that he goes to the meetings of Dinosaur Club. "However, I am always available to the invitation of any faculty group. I feel that is my role as academic dean," Farber said.

Farber, in response to a question directed towards his actual role in the club, stated, "I am neutral. My role is of observer and interpreter of any policy the group might not be sure of."

"It is unfortunate that polarization among faculty members exists here at DePauw. I would hope that it could be minimized," Farber added.

When asked whether he saw a conflict of interest between his role as Dean and his attendance at Dinosaur Club meetings Farber commented, "No, I am neutral."

The same question was posed to Farber with regard to the roles of department heads, the faculty parliamentarian, and members of the Faculty Committee on Faculty.

"We hope that our professors would remain neutral in the classroom," Farber stated. He would not, however, comment as to the political implications of these faculty members being aligned with a certain interest group.

THE CURRENT ISSUE — TERMINAL CONTRACTS

Terminal contracts are the focus of faculty polities at this moment. Division IV of the faculty has drawn up a resolution protesting certain activities involved in the hiring-firing process of professors, as well as the lack of attention payed to the faculty's role in establishing policy at the university.

The resolution was printed in the April 24th issue of THE DEPAUW and has created some stir on the campus; students, for example, are signing a petition in support of the resolution.

"The resolution," stated one of its authors "was most certainly a political move."

"The time has come for action, not clandestine gripping. It's the first time some of us have really gotten to fight the administration, the Dinosaurs, and all of those who would sit back and watch DePauw become a place where academic freedom is akin to country club initiation scruples."

Other faculty members made anonymous comments which directly linked the relationship between the Dinosaur Club, political ideology within the faculty, and the issuance of terminal contracts.

"The Dinosaur Club is a pressure group," one faculty member said. "My first year here, I asked a question about parliamentary procedure. I was later congratulated for my courage."

"I was not aware that it took a great amount of fortitude to question a point of order. I was shocked."

"Let's face it," said another professor. "The liberal, untenured people have been fired over the last five years because they don't agree with the ideology of the power structures here."

"When we perceive that the power structure is meeting in the guise of neutral 'interest' group, it can only be judged as something very dishonest, shocking, and, in a word, disgusting."

"It is certainly a sad situation," said yet another professor, "when untenured faculty members feel they cannot speak out at a meeting because the Dinosaurs who control faculty positions may hold them in jeopardy."

"I was told by a member of the Faculty Committee on Faculty," said another untenured professor. "That something I had said was 'a personal attack on him' and would not be forgotten when my tenureship came up."

"He was a Dinosaur, I'm sure of that. I guess now I'll have to just wait around and see if the ox falls."

"tenure not the villain of the piece"

In 1971, the psychologist James McKeen Cattell was fired by the trustees of Columbia University. The immediate grounds were provided by his lukewarm support of America's effort in World War One, but he would likely not have been dismissed if he hadn't been a long-time critic of the manner in which Columbia was governed. In particular, Cattell attacked a system which placed dictatorial power in the hands of President Nicholas Murray Butler, the great pioneer of American university administration, who was responsible only to trustees quite distant from the world of higher education. The case occurred years ago, but the AAUP Bulletin considered it relevant enough to deserve an article by Carol S. Gruber in its Autumn, 1972 issue (fascinating reading).

I am a professional historian, and I know the dangers of historical analogy. No one would dream of comparing President Kerstetter, for example, with Columbia's President Butler. As for James McKeen Cattell, he was a prominent scholar with private means, while our own campus faculty "rebels" are hardly as well off. But the parallels are intriguing. At Columbia, action was taken against individual members of the faculty with the support, or at least the acquiescence, of a significant segment of the faculty itself. Faculty committees concerned with possible punitive action against faculty members were dominated by deans, department heads and others closely identified with the administration. At DePauw, faculty meetings are chaired by President Kerstetter, with Dean Robert H. Farber sitting on his right hand. The Faculty Committee on Faculty, which deals with hiring, firing and raises, consists of Kerstetter and Farber as ex officio members, the department head of the faculty member concerned in a particular case, and five elected members. At present writing, one of these was a department head. The proportion has been rather higher in the past. Is a junior faculty member likely to receive a fair hearing in a case which has offended the DePauw establishment, from a group composed of two high administrators, two department heads (who are presidential appointees), and four other senior faculty? Even a tenured faculty member in such a position is likely to feel uncomfortable.

In May 1971, the faculty adopted an alternate grievance procedure, exclusively for academic freedom complaints. The procedure requires a hearing before the elected members of the Faculty Committee, sitting without their ex officio members and without the complainant's own department head. Failing a satisfactory decision, the complainant may next take his case to a specially elected

Faculty Appeals Committee, consisting of three tenured faculty nominated by the divisions and elected at large. This committee would have the right to render an advisory opinion to the President. To date, this rather cumbersome procedure has been invoked only twice, by myself. One reason it has not been used more often is that it involves only academic freedom cases. But what is an "academic freedom case?" Almost by definition, it is a case which is hard to establish, and even harder to prove. There are many ways in which a faculty member may be punished, without producing a clear-cut violation of his academic freedom. This is in part my fault. Back in 1971, Dean Farber admitted to me that I had received a low raise, in part because I had written certain letters to The DePauw. This admission produced the new grievance procedure, more money for me, and some administration embarrassment. It would appear that the administration has learned its lesson—since 1971 there have been no more unaccountable fits of honesty in Studebaker Hall. Small wonder that faculty prefer to suffer in silence.

Students ought to realize that tenure is not the villain of the piece. Tenure, within this context, only affords a certain minimal protection to unconventional senior faculty, who might be easily fired without it. And another point deserves strong emphasis. "Liberal" faculty members are not defenseless dolls, hurling ineffective spears at reactionary "dinosaurs," as The DePauw suggested last year. They are perfectly capable of organizing themselves, and even of dominating certain aspects of the system. The problem lies within the system itself. The powers of the most exalted faculty committee, or of the entire faculty in meeting assembled, are little more than advisory if crucial "constitutional" issues are at stake. In most important matters, the President is limited only by his responsibility to the Board of Trustees. Worse yet, the President chooses to exercise his power invisibly, or to let it go by default, and others in the administration come to play an ill-defined role. Is a particular decision President Kerstetter's own, or that of a group of advisors, or that of a particular subordinate like Vice-President Norman Knights or Dean Farber, or has it even been made at all? One rarely knows. Our administration may be close-mouthed and dictatorial, but I would be the last to claim it was efficient and rational. A faculty member wishing to "change the system" has a hard time even in finding out what the "system" actually is. He is about as likely to hit upon the truth as a DePauw reporter.

"a slave who is foreman over a gang of slaves is a slave no less."

The academic year began with the firing of Donald Rhodes. Commenting on newspaper reports of this sudden administrative action,

Professor Arthur W. Shumaker was quoted in The DePauw as saying, "I don't think there is a climate of fear." What he may possibly have meant is that he, personally, was not afraid. Indeed, why should he have been? But there are others who are more outspoken, and less secure, than Professor Shumaker, and they are apt to become afraid. After all, jobs are hard to come by these days. I understand these hesitations on the part of my more timid colleagues, but they are small fears. It is always sad when good people belittle themselves by fearing petty men. I hope that one who has been thought an arrogant young man by many, may be allowed a small arrogance in print. I have been, in the past, afraid of many things, from the policeman on the corner to not making my car payments. But not long after I came to DePauw, I said quite deliberately to myself, "The day a two-bit administrator in a jerk-water college makes you afraid, you will go home and slit your throat."

Students tend to believe that the faculty members who judge them are powerful men. This is true in a way, but nonsense in another. A slave who is foreman over a gang of slaves is a slave no less. But at least the faculty may say, in excuse, that they are more or less let alone in their classrooms, that they are most of them supporting families in difficult times, and that they therefore see no compelling reason to rebel. It does not do to be too intolerant of human weakness. And you students who pay for the privilege of being here, you who could easily stir yourselves to take your business elsewhere, what is your excuse?

Mad magazine, in an issue that came out during the 1972 presidential election, had a picture on the back cover portraying the head of the statue of liberty with the faces of each of the presidential and vice presidential candidates appearing at the portals of the dear lady. Running down the lady's cheek was a tear.

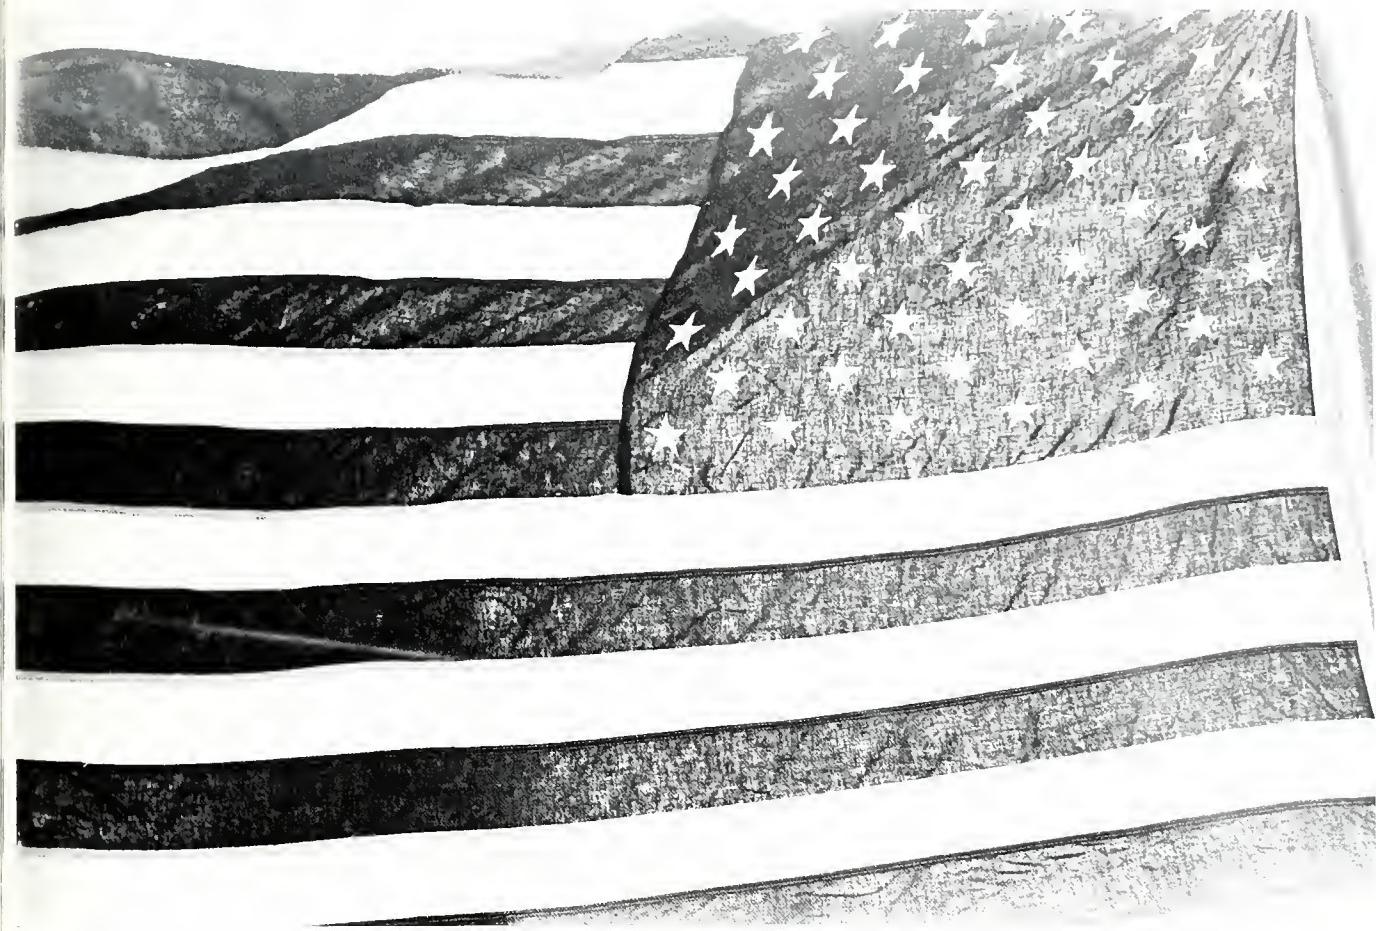

Perhaps more than anything else that was printed about the election this picture captured the real spirit of it all. Across the country people expressed sentiments against one of the factions involved.

Few were enthusiastic for a particular candidate. On the one hand was the pseudo-charismatic double of Liberace in the person of George McGovern, and on the other was General George Armstrong Custer reincarnate in the person of Richard Nixon. In times of ungodly economic stress and useless killing in the name of Thieu where was one to turn? The answer was more than uncertain. The only thing that seemed clear was where one should not turn.

Here at DePauw the student vote favored Custer to Liberace. In a survey taken by the DePauw 66% of the campus favored Nixon, and 20% favored McGovern. The battle raged on in the supposedly liberal atmosphere that should exist on a college campus. Everywhere posters and stickers could be seen, and everywhere they were mutilated by poor sports. Democrats and Republicans could be seen throughout campus (and even at football games) arguing against the opposition. But in the end Mr. Nixon was re-elected.

In fact Nixon took every state in the union except for Massachusetts and the District of Columbia. What more can you say than that? You can hardly say that the better man won. You can hardly evaluate who the better man is. And it certainly wouldn't be proper to say, "Nice job, George," because George seemed to do his best at times to lose. I only wish that it were possible for the end of an election to stop the flow of tears from Madam Liberty's eyes.

election '72

First the instructions . . .

and then to the booth to vote.

After last spring's hassles with the city of Greencastle over student voting rights, DePauw students participated in the '72 election. A campus poll showed 66% of the students planning to vote for Nixon. The remaining 20% were apalled, but justified the poll with remarks about the campus' conservatism. Students for McGovern sprang up as an organized group as well a Re-elect the President Committee. But did students really participate in the election? Except for the McGovernites, it was another point for the apathetic register of the anus of the Midwest.

"Yes, many people get killed."

"I can stop them."

"How?"

"They'll stop fighting if I give them my nickle, won't they?"

On January 23 President Richard M. Nixon announced the end of the war in Vietnam—the US's longest war. It seems that since he couldn't announce it on election day due to a communication gap between H. Kissinger and President Thieu, that it was only proper to make the "grand and glorious" announcement on the third day following his inauguration.

The war has ended, but not without much bitterness toward the President by many of the American people. Couldn't it have ended sooner? What about the statement that "Any pres. who can't end a war in four years shouldn't be re-elected." Why the increase in Nov. bombing if "Peace" was really at hand?

The press releases by the government since 1964 sound like the south's proclamations at the beginning of the civil war: "The war will be over in three weeks," that became three months and then stretched far too long with far too many lives lost "for the cause."

It would be ridiculous to try and analyze the US involvement in Vietnam. But how history treats the war will be interesting. How DePauw students now treat the

A visit from St. Dick

By JOHN MOORE

My great uncle Clement C. Moore recently revised his classic Yuletide poem. Though it appears a bit late for this past Christmas season, I'm sure it will still be topical when the next rolls around.

"Twas the night before Christmas, and all through Vietnam,/ Not a creature was stirring, not even a SAM./ The camouflage netting was hung out with care,/ In fear that Uncle Samuel soon would be there./ The children were quaking in hospital beds,/ While visions of fire-bombs danced in their heads./ While nurse at her station, and I in my chair,/ Had just finished surgery, a shrapnel repair./ When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,/ I sprang from my chair to see what was the matter./ Away at the window I saw a red flash/ Tear open the shutters and throw up the sash. The glare from the bomb on the levees and dikes./ Gave a ghastly red tinge to all of the types./ Then I saw in the sky to my total dismay,/ A B-52 with co-Pilot Lemay. With a little old driver, so sneaky and slick,/ I knew in a moment it must be St. Dick./ More rapid than war hawks, his buddies they came. And he whistled and shouted and called them by name, Now Kissinger, Now Lavelle, Now Kleindienst and Thieu. On Galley, Westmoreland, Medina, Agnew./ The top of the porch, the top of the wall. They dashed away, dashed away, dashed away all. And then in a twinkling I heard on the lawns The B-52's after dropping their bombs. I was counting my wounds, to total of nine. When Dick crashed through the door and flashed a peace sign. Dressed in red, white and blue from his foot to his head. Screeching: "The only good Comme is one that is dead." His six guns ablaze with American pride. He looked just like Patton with God on his side. His eyes how they shone with murderous hope. His smile like a gargoyle, his nose a ski slope. His droll little mouth was drawn up in a grim. His stubble as black as original sin. The pin of a grenade he held tight in his teeth. And the smoke—it encircled his head like a wreath. His intrinsically face, and little pot belly. Shook as he lit up the pink napalm jelly. He was giggling insanely—a right jelly old elf. And I knew he'd when I saw him in spite of myself. As he glanced at my eyes, and puffed at my head. I had the strange feeling I soon would be dead. He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work. Ripped by body asunder with one mighty jerk. Then he sprang to his bomber, to his pals gave a whistle. And away they all flew, losing ten to a missile. But I heard him exclaim as he flew out of sight. "Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night!"

war when they are 50 is even more interesting to speculate. Will they be as apathetic as in 71, 72, and 73?

The DePauw student body was not actively for or against the war in Vietnam. A small push with speakers from Indiana Hoosiers for Peace, a table set up in the academic quad for a week telling of the atrocities of the war, and a few token war protest songs at the Duck were all DePauw offered this year.

Maybe it's a good political tactic—stretch a war until all controversy and violent protest against it have died out, and then end it when no one's looking. All they say then is

"It's over."

In his address to the nation informing the people of the war's end, Nixon said that he had demanded "Peace with honor" and that we, the American people, had also demanded it. Congratulations, Mr. Nixon. You made it. You hold the honor of the peace. You ended the war. You brought peace. But how dirty is that peace, Mr. Nixon? And how many people were killed so that you could have the "honor" of not withdrawing troops until you could set the terms? How much honor is there really? How long will it last?

students abroad . . .

O wad some Power the Giftie

to see ourselves as others

—Robert Burns

Everyone expects and anticipates a vast array of educational opportunities during a semester or year abroad. The demands of living in a foreign culture, of traveling, of coping with new and unexpected situations, provide challenging learning situations. The chance to study under foreign professors, to see great art collections in person, to sample cultural events, to pursue independent work on the scene are an a priori part of study abroad. Such experiences impart knowledge whose immediacy no book can approach, and which will not be forgotten.

Study abroad, however, can be a learning experience of more subtle, perhaps more intangible, but in the long-run more important nature. When one takes off from an American airport destined for several months in a distant country, he experiences a freedom which may never again be duplicated. He has left his home, his country, his acquaintances, his family, his past—a large part of his identity—behind. He is left with something he has little choice but to identify as himself, stripped of most of the baggage he has carried through life. When a student reaches his destination, he confronts another liberating experience. He may be in Europe, but he is not European; he is an American, but he is not in the United States. He occupies a peculiarly objective position, which many find somewhat unsettling. A common reaction is to attempt to submerge one's Americanism, to hide one's nationality, and become European. It doesn't take weeks to learn it can't be done. Study abroad, consequently, is almost indicative-imperative learning experience. Beyond the obvious educational opportunities it offers, it frees one to see himself and his past as never before. The imperative it imposes is to comfort this condition, a challenge which few can escape. I can only speak for myself, but I learned much more about myself, my past, my country than I did about Europe. And I wouldn't trade that knowledge to have the Bernini altar in my own living room.

education there and now

In France one may often spend three or four hours at the dinner meal; in Germany outdoor markets and small specialty stores (butchers, bakeries, cheese or wine shops) are places for gathering and discussing the latest happenings; in Italy the trains are hardly ever on time; in Austria walking and bicycle riding are modes of transportation, not just hobbies. In Europe there exists a set of pace often quite different from the one followed by many Americans, and this new time scheme can be of major importance in expressing the value of a student studying abroad while in college.

By the time the average student enters college he has learned to budget his time fairly well. He generally allots a certain amount to studying, eating, sleeping, and goofing off. Although the proportion of time spent on each of these activities varies greatly from one student to another, one generally has a schedule he follows fairly rigidly. On the flight to Europe the time changes by six hours and for many students their sense of time is never quite the same after landing.

The first evidence of this "time loss" is the desire to do things on the spur of the moment, spontaneous ideas requiring little planning and aiming towards no definite goal. As an example, imagine the student in Paris who decided on his first night in the city to simply take off in some direction, on foot yet, to search for the first famous landmark he can find. In actuality he ends up walking about five miles but he is never phased; then suddenly he happens to stumble on the place de la Concorde and turns to face the brilliant Champs Elysee. Never once does he complain of sore feet or of the time he has "wasted" walking instead of taking a taxi. For once a truly exhilarating experience takes place without a bit of work and pressure to get it done on time." The enjoyment is present at that very moment, not in a goal to be attained some time in the future one can simply stroll up the broad avenue watching the people, looking in the shop windows, and soaking up the atmosphere.

After several days of this pace one arrives at the second phase of his European orientation. One generally feels that things have been going so free and easy that soon everything has to catch up with him. He will be hit with an avalanche of duties to do and responsibilities to fulfill. Perhaps at this point one begins attending classes at the university where he is to study. The old ingrained desire to get away with as little work as possible enters one's mind. If lucky, the student has professors who see the value in lectures, but also as importantly, see the value in actual experiences through travelling and meeting new people.

Students rarely have any difficulty losing any sense of guilt they might have about not studying most of the time. They are soon able to begin to break out of their former rigid time schedules. Unless the courses are offered on a pass/fail basis, the students still may feel anxious about grades. However, a sense of exploration enters the students, and learning actually becomes an experience more varied and exciting than lectures and textbook.

Picture the student who is taking a course on The City involving touches of architecture, education, and city planning. How appropriate that the course should include field trips to see various cathedrals in nearby cities! The course also allows students to learn about the economic aspects of the city by visiting a vineyard and tasting wines, one of the more vital products of the area.

Education becomes alive and very "here and now," not far away in some vague, distant cathedral or factory where everything one studies takes place. Education is actually relevant to what one is doing. Most importantly, one's goals become changed from "the grade" to actually learning something simply because it is interesting.

out-in-town housing

“Some students are granted permission to rent rooms in private homes in Greencastle; however, there may be no visiting hours for members of the opposite sex in rental arrangements of this type.”

All out-in-town residences must pass university inspection.

No cooking facilities will be permitted in OIT houses.

A DePauw workforce often looks like a WPA project.

While BR slept (?), the buildings fell.

The work only stopped when people were awake.

"Roy O. West is falling down, falling down, falling down. Roy O. West is falling down, and other things around it."

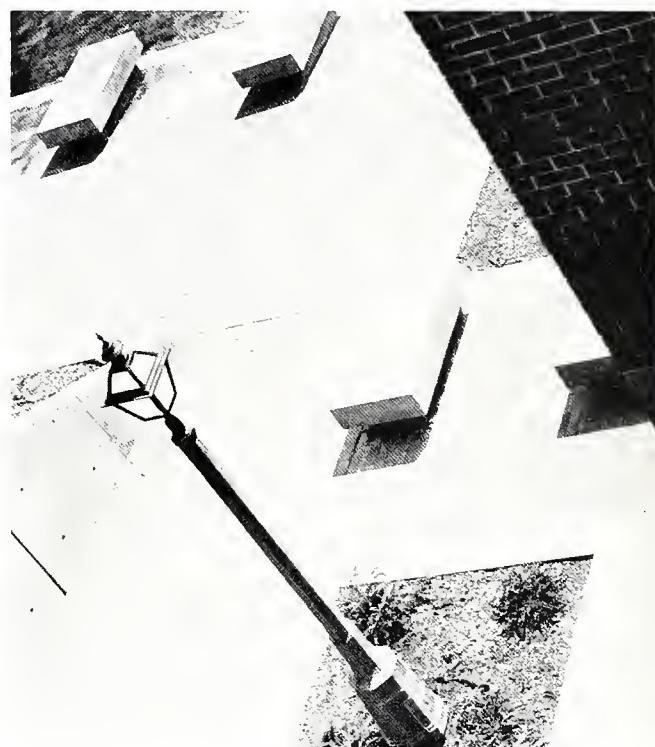

The campus was overflowing with university construction this year. With the completion of the Science Center, the re-roofing of the library, and the tearing down of many potential out-in-town houses to make parking lots and "tree farms," bulldozers were running until dark after awakening everyone at 7:30 a.m. with their clanging.

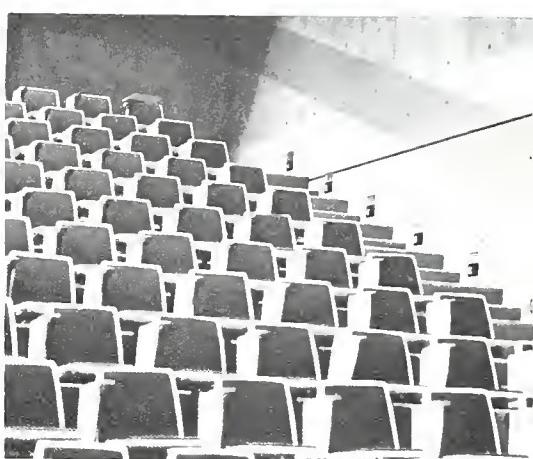

Hard hats became a "natural" sight on campus, and "dodge the falling bricks" became a new way to pass the time in front of the libs.

The library — a great place to study

brisk almost winter afternoon with nothing you need except to talk to Ms. Hamm and watch her eyes crinkle
when she smiles
and to drink a cup of hot cider with a little cinnamon on top to slowly warm your throat and then your stomach
and a nearby hand to keep you warm.

Laughter or possibly an argument floats up to you from the back and you smile
"How many discussion

and you remember.
And then it's dark and people
all kinds of people
start to drop in and you know it's almost time for Sue as the door jingles once more and you see her and watch her

women's liberation

of meaningless social criteria—a system that was so obviously void of different races but primarily Upper Middle Class White Protestants.

How does this pertain to the woman's movement? It goes back to the meaningless social criteria used for selecting women as members. These criteria reinforce and perpetuate feminine roles for students at a time when experimentation with different roles is so necessary. Women are judged along lines that have oppressed them for so long. How attractive is a woman? How many dates does she have? In other words, how appealing is she to the opposite sex and how will she raise the prestige of our house? She is rarely appraised in terms of being a human being—her intelligence or similar criteria are seldom discussed.

Women have been denied membership to sororities for reasons of sexual activity while men are never excluded for this reason. Once women are in a house they are cautioned to be discreet in all of their sexual dealings. This is not an endorsement for sexual promiscuity. But, in this light, the sororities perpetuate the double standard which men have long used as an effective tool of oppression against women.

The activities that sororities concern themselves with are largely in line with the traditional and confining women's role. Sunday dress faculty teas are the rule, and round table forums with faculty members (as some fraternities hold) are the exception. Many sororities hold regulations which are quite sexist. Dress regulations are still enforced at some houses. Many sororities still have no visitation or limited visitation, which means that all social arrangements with men perpetuate the man as the aggressor taking the woman back to his living unit. Men's living units don't seem to mind having women walking around their upstairs living area, but many coeds could not bear to be seen in curlers or without makeup even in the 1970's.

The fraternity branch of the Greek system is not without blame either, holding such social events as the Watermelon Bust in which the winner is the girl with the largest breasts. Yet, the student body is told that the girl is also chosen for poise, charm etc. which seems to mean (in the case of the last two years) the girl who can come up with the most clever remark about her sexual organs. For example this year is, "I want to be Bo-Som Buddies with everyone on campus." How charming!

The administration perpetuates that woman's role at DePauw in four ways: sexist regulations and lack of women faculty, lack of courses on women, and the lack of coed living.

Freshmen women are the only students on campus who have hours. This regulation is blatantly sexist. Freshmen

another depauw farce? by nancy ebe

women are discriminated against for no other reason than their sex.

In the men's dorms maids come in and change the bed linen, yet no such service is provided for women. Everyone knows that women should know how to do those things for their obvious future as wives and mothers.

The small percent of females on the faculty is shocking, and the women faculty that does exist is largely concentrated in a few areas: Women's physical education, Language, Nursing.

Courses are offered in black history but only one course is offered concerning the history of the women's movement. The university apparently has no desire to educate women concerning their sex's achievements or give them any pride in their identity as a sex.

Time Magazine reported that eighty percent of the universities and colleges in the country have coed living of some type. Traditionally DePauw does not. Coed living can often provide destruction of meaningless sexual roles and myths. Perhaps this would be too much of a distraction for many DePauw students.

The women's movement is not a fad as some DePauw people have suggested. It had its beginnings in the early 19th century. The movement lost momentum after women's suffrage was obtained but in the 1960's the women's movement gained new strength and is helping to alleviate inequities for women in many areas. A women's movement at DePauw could be very meaningful in helping DePauw women prepare themselves for what they will face after graduation. In retrospect, perhaps DePauw does just that.

Home for the Alpha Gams was more than just a place to hang their hats. There was a feeling of harmony, a knowledge that they were more than just friends, or even sisters. They were definitely chums. Even more, they discovered in their famous lettuce boycott of '72 that their ideals were closer than they had ever dreamed. There was security, too, knowing that their brothers next door were waiting, paddles in hand, to defend them from nighttime intruders.

Through all this and more, a new spirit and unity arose, yet one that didn't stifle even the smallest minority—be it a liberated woman or a victorian conservative—for the house was more diversified than ever. They found that Alpha Gamma Delta was truly home.

BR is, however, located on the corner of Olive and College across from the Performing Arts center (?). Highlights for the men this year, aside from our outstanding IM record, were the "Fish Cheer" incident, laundry night, and some monumental moments of mental masturbation.

Never heard of it, but Sigma Delta Chi lives on. Founded at DePauw to give the green copper statue in East College quad some stature, this national fraternity is coed now. a time

Once upon a time in a distant, unreal and relatively unknown land known as DePauw University there existed a yearbook called The Mirage (how aptly named). This yearbook was blest with an unreal and particularly distant staff. Typists were few in numbers, layout men deserted their posts in favor of other activities, and photographers were non existant. Despite these hardships there were a few who labored vigilantly on to make the Mirage a reality (romantics all).

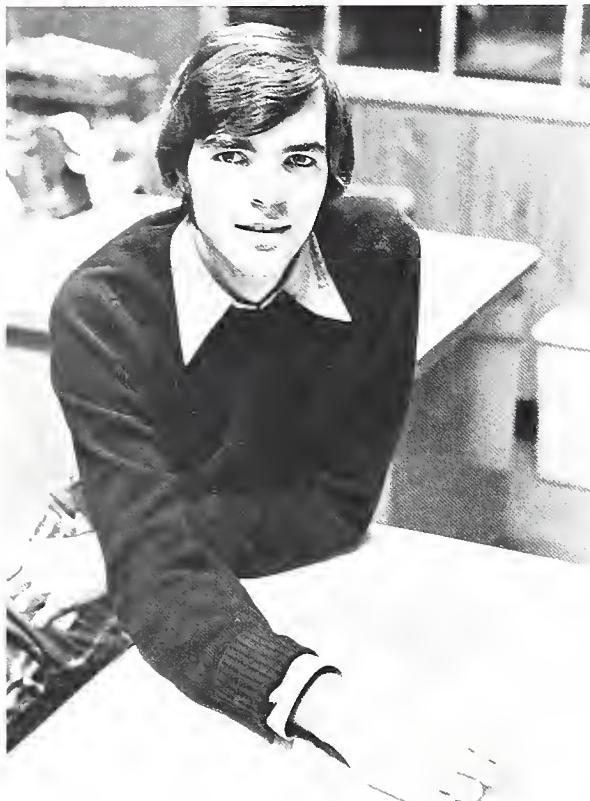

Quixotic editor, Linda Heuring, and her staff set out in DePauw-land to satisfy the needs of its inhabitants with a Mirage. They fought against all odds including windmills and giant circulation deficits. They battled apathetic customers and even more apathetic photographers but in the end they won.

You are holding in your hand the result of this struggle. I wish it were possible to accurately convey the magnitude of work and tears behind these pages. Let us just say that from our work here in the publications building we know that this book is not a mirage. The campus of DePauw University is.

"It's MS!, not MISS!" and "When are you going to learn how to spell relevant?"

"Is that closed door session over yet?" and it's copy session at The DePauw and everyone is running around as if nothing was even planned to go into the issue.

"Have you seen the What do you Think pics?" And it's still copy session while the editor sits behind her desk and desperately tries to get her editorial written while 40 people are running in and out with dumb questions and her hot ham and cheese gets cold.

"What kind of a story is this?" and the layout desk screams for a page and the news editor screams for copy and the reporter screams that he has an hourly. But it gets done, and big issues are broken and covered, and the sign stays up on the editor's door: "A good newspaper is more than the bottom of a birdcage."

can you find your senate rep? relax, no one else can either.

The student senate at DePauw underwent major changes in the late fall of 1972. Under the leadership of student body president (SBP) Bob Franks, the senate changed the structure of the organization by removing the constitution, cutting the size of the senate, coordinating elections, salary-ing the SBP, and reorganizing appointments to the Community Concerns Committee (CCC).

The senate was previously governed by an out-dated constitution that was full of contradictions. It was thrown out and a new ruling document devised that included the Articles of Senate set up by Preston Moore, 1970-71 SBP. The new senate document outlines the purpose, responsibility, and philosophy of the senate.

One major change will be that only one senator will be elected from each living unit, rather than the previous two. One at-large member will be appointed for every 400 students enrolled in the University, giving senate 5 at-large members next year. Full-member but non-voting status will be given to a representative from WGRE and THE DEPAUW for reporting purposes.

All new senators will take office during the second week in February instead of whenever elected by their respective living units as in the past. The only exception will be freshman women senators who will take office immediately following their election in early Oct. Starting with Frank's successor, the SBP will receive a stipend of $125 per semester.

CCC applicants will no longer be chosen by the group of LU presidents, but will be interviewed by a senate committee and voted upon by senate.

The changes are all going to enhance the organization of the senate, but the question of what can it do?

power still remains open. Does the student senate at DePauw really have any power. Unfortunately the answer is No. Senate can work for all kinds of changes within their own structure, but they have no power to change anything outside of themselves.

Senate can start and carry out projects like the DePauw tutorial program, but major changes or projects? No. What ever happened to the ideal where students could take their concerns to the senate? Students being helped with organizing for a specific concern?

Take it to CCC? A proposal has to be tight to even be considered by CCC. Students

bob franks—president

can't expect to have a proposal passed that isn't tight, lacking any possible area of the situation. But where does a student look to for help in organizing? A few "radical" students that they know will at least listen to them.

But this should be the job of the senate. Help students organize. Let them explain their projects, let them use senate's know-how on procedure and get the opinions of a cross-section if not a sounding board for the students? What is it if not a place for students to go when they are dissatisfied with the University or any other institution? It should be where students can plan together, and plan professionally and ideally.

If proposals start flowing out of the senate, good proposals, proposals about important issues, and handed to CCC to work on, senate will have gained some power. Not power as "governing" power, but the power of voice, the power of student opinion, that after being submitted so often and so vehemently must see there are concerned students on this campus.

The internal changes are a step in the right direction. By getting rid of a lot of red tape the senate can start to function. But don't let it stop there. The student senate belongs to the students. Use it or abolish it.

A black and white collage featuring several dogs and one cat. In the upper left, a large dog with dark fur and a white patch on its chest looks directly at the camera. To its right, a smaller dog with a light-colored coat and a dark collar is also looking forward. In the upper right, a fluffy, light-colored cat is partially visible. The lower half of the image is dominated by a large, dark, shaggy dog, possibly a Rottweiler or similar breed, looking slightly to the right. The overall composition is a dense, overlapping arrangement of animal portraits.

this was the year that was

How do you sum up a year at DePauw? Looking out the Pub building window you can see almost everything, you know.

Summer ended and the libs was still being repaired, falling bricks were everywhere. Checkers were added to the library to keep people from ripping out books, officials said they could hire people and lose less money.

For some unknown reason the famous "Fine Arts Center" remained in the planning stages. Possibly it will be like the Science Center—completed years after it was proposed to be. It was finally finished and then dedicated this year through the efforts of Donald C. Rhoades, whom the University promptly fired. Does the administration really want to complete their proposed buildings?

All kinds of new things were in the air. Beneath The Boulder, a long lost underground DePauw newspaper was revived by Jeani Hawkins to compete with The DePauw, and The DePauw continued to break news stories like The Dinosaurs, Terminal Contracts, Rhoades' firing, and who really knows what's next?

A new rule that all untenured faculty without their PhD's would get the axe proposed nine terminal contracts in February, and last year's victim, Herb Levine, taught on with his almost flawless form of lecturing and initiating class discussion. On this spring's Terminals Norman J. Knights, executive vice-pres. of the University, said they weren't just getting rid of liberals with the '73 contracts. True, but are they (the adm.) getting rid of EVERYBODY?

Tuition hikes this year of $50 per semester were doubled as this fall a $100 increase per semester is planned. With no faculty left, where will the $400,000 the students pay extra go?

All the regular activities were held as usual, Old Gold Day, Derby Day, rush, and even admissions weekends. Actually you couldn't really say the place has changed this year.

Student activists were few and far between, but a Women's group was formed to discuss the problems of being a woman at DePauw. Besides that, you could say that not much went on.

There were the regular "traditional" activities in full force through this year. Ringing the East College bell, Boulder Runs (The Phi Psi's posed for a Playboy photographer on a Boulder Run and DePauw made an article on nudity on campuses), dating, and just general fiftyish activities.

Sum up this year? In one word? Typical

THE DEPAUW

DINO & A
Healyman

It's now 5 a.m. February 5, 1973. The yearbook will be mailed to the printers' in approximately 3 hours. The entire book of 256 pages. I still have pictures in the wash that have to be dried and the layouts done before we go to print. We will make it.

You hold in your hand the finished product of a year's work. I won't say it is all good. At 5 in the morning you seem to lose any feeling about what is good journalism and what isn't. For those pages, including numerous pages of candids, I apologize. There are other parts of the book that I won't apologize for. They are what the book really is—a critique of DePauw life, how it is and how it could be. It's a little negative, but to be honest, it had to be.

The essays are meant to show this. Some you may laugh at, some will make you angry. I hope that as you laugh or get mad you'll take a look at yourself and your school and evaluate both. The staff had to do some evaluation too as they put this book together. "Is this fit to print? Do we really want to say that?" What is in this book was considered, reconsidered, and considered again. The issues were pertinent, and so were the facts we came up with. Nevertheless it is you that has to pass judgement upon this book. With all its shortcomings and inconsistencies, may you enjoy it, and think about what it says.

I started this book with a staff of 42, and it slowly dwindled because of classes, pledge meetings, and sheer unconcern. But with the few staff members available and concerned we put out a book. Photographers didn't show up for house pictures, HOUSES didn't show up for house pictures, and layout people didn't even bother to call and say they weren't coming over to the Pub building. I'd like to thank all of you, though, for showing me what real apathy is. You are the same people who will gripe if you aren't pictured in the book and who will also demand that your book come out on time when you don't bother to help.

the book in sum

I began to think in Nov. after spending Thanksgiving vacation here to work on the book and having no pictures to work with, that perhaps the yearbook is a dying institution. My ideas have changed. The yearbook isn't dying. It's still a means to communicate with people, a way to show what a University is really like, but it is the people who are dying. People who are no longer interested in forming the unity of a staff to publish a yearbook to communicate with the rest of the campus.

Enough soapbox. It must be spending 20 straight hours at the Pub building. Possibly it's that I'm behind in classes and they've only been meeting for one week. Or possibly I'm just so tired I'm being honest. The book in sum should be happy. To make it happy I say thanks. Thanks to the staff members that are here now, who have been here all along, who have made this book a team effort, small team though it may be.
